PROBLEM TO BE SOLVED: To solve a problem that RDB processing cannot be performed in a general browser which does not correspond to an XML schema. SOLUTION: First, a schema information element is prepared from schema information in a database (steps 51 to 53) and it is utilized as a template for reading and converting a database item and preparing a data information element (steps 54 to 57), thereby converted XML data is made to have an XML document instance form. By storing the schema information in the database as a schema information element in a schema information element with the data information element like this, it is possible to refer schema information in the general browser.
